MORRISVILLE TO GIVE PROTECTION FOR THIRTY DAYS

Council Extends Time So Arrangements Can Be Worked Out

WANTS COMPENSATION

Falls and Lower Makefield Townships Are Both Affected

MORRISVILLE, July 2—Residents of Falls and Lower Makefield Townships have been assured that fire protection will be given them by the Morrisville Fire Department for a period of 30 days and that service will not be discontinued as previously announced.

Action was taken at a special meeting of the Morrisville Borough Council held Friday night. Announcement had been made that after July 1st fire protection would not be given by the Morrisville department.

In the meantime, an effort will be made to have supervisors of the townships and members of Common Council come to an agreement for payment of fire protection service. The proposals from the two townships will be submitted to Morrisville Council at its next regular meeting. Council had notified supervisors of the two townships that unless an agreement was signed by which Falls Township would pay $1,000 per year and Lower Makefield Township $400 a year, the fire protection service from here would be discontinued on July 1.

James E. Groome, of Yardley, president of the Bucks County Firemen's Association, who was asked to speak by Mayor Thomas B. Stockham, was the real peace-maker as he "poured oil on the troubled waters" and really persuaded Morrisville Council at least to postpone its drastic action. He paved the way for negotiations between the borough and the township supervisors.

The discussion waged pretty warm until Mr. Groome spoke, and for a time it appeared as if the original order would stand. Mr. Groome discussed the matter impartially and from all angles.

Karl King, head of the King Farms Company, of Falls Township, was opposed to Falls Township paying anything for the fire protection given by Morrisville, but reversed his stand later and offered to give $50 a year to each of the local companies if Morrisville would accept the offer of $300 for this year as made by Falls Township supervisors.

Mr. King told Morrisville councilmen that their policy was short-sighted. He said outlying districts partially supported Morrisville by patronizing doctors, bank and business houses here and by employment of Morrisville labor. He said the $1,000 was far more than could be paid.

At the outset of the meeting, President Abram T. Lynch pointed out that Morrisville taxpayers in five years had raised $30,428 in taxes for fire protection and that 60 per cent of the calls were from out of town.

It was brought out in the meeting that Falls Township had contributed $300 to the borough for fire protection in 1928 and that the local firemen had received about $1,500 in the last seven or eight years from Arborlea and Edgemoor Gardens which are a part of Lower Makefield Township.

In its drastic order, the borough had announced that the service would not be discontinued in these two latter sections which had made contributions through their civic associations.

Mayor Stockham also spoke briefly and urged the two groups to get together and settle the question, and added he believed the townships should help with fire protection costs.

Councilman John G. Bleasdale, chairman of the Fire Protection Committee, pointed out that a fire tax is levied in Morrisville to support the fire companies, and said while firemen are willing to give their services to the townships the people of the borough are demanding outlying townships to pay for services rendered.

MEDICAL PROFESSION MUST ROUSE ITSELF

If It Wishes to Maintain Its Professional Integrity

IS OPINION OF BEAMISH

HARRISBURG, July 2—(INS)—"The medical profession in Pennsylvania must rouse itself from its lethargy if it wishes to maintain its professional integrity, its freedom of functions and its more or less financial independence," in the opinion of Secretary of the Commonwealth Richard J. Beamish.

Declaring the movement for "socialized medicine" is sweeping the nation, Beamish advised physicians to enter politics. He said:

"My advice to the doctors of Pennsylvania, to the nurses, and to every person who has the honor and continued progress of the medical and nursing professions at heart, is to get into politics now. The solution of this problem will lie as much in the domain of politics as that of economics.

"Two movements should be set on foot immediately by Pennsylvania doctors. First, there should be organization reaching into every county to protect the interests of physicians against the wrecking of professional standards. Second, there should be a plan which would be worked out by doctors after conference with sympathetic economists which would protect workers and at the same time assure physicians of their professional freedom."

Beamish warned that if the medical profession refuses to accept the responsibility of preparing and approving such a plan, "that work in all probability will be done for them by politicians and sociologists outside of the profession."

Beamish said "socialized medicine" threatened the private practice of physicians, activity in research of laboratory workers and the "self-respect and future usefulness" of the medical profession. He added:

"The danger to the medical profession does not come from the professional politicians, the half-baked theorists and the self-exploiters who are conspicuous in the movement.

"It comes from the large and increasing body of honest, socially-minded men and women who sincerely desire to alleviate human misery in all its forms and who see in socialized medicine the means to bring needed aid to individuals and families when sickness and destitution combine to wreck homes and human lives.

"Propositions to introduce variations of Germany's and England's panel system into America have been introduced in several states.

"The latest and most impressive effort in this direction comes from California where a state Senate committee for the investigation of the high cost of sickness is framing a 'report on a health insurance act for the reduction of the high cost of sickness.' The committee is considering a plan, the object of which is to place California, so far as sickness is concerned, under something resembling England's panel system."

Beamish warned physicians: "With this condition clearly and inevitably before it, the medical profession of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania must bestir itself if it desires to maintain its professional integrity. Pennsylvania is a great industrial commonwealth. California has only a fraction of the mechanized industries contained within Pennsylvania's borders. Workers in industries and their families require more hospitalization and more medical treatment than the agricultural workers of California."

POLISH FLIERS AT THORN

For the first time since they took off from Floyd Bennett Field, New York, Friday, they were greeted by persons speaking their native tongue. The fliers were so pleased at the reception they decided to have lunch at Thorn with municipal officials before proceeding to Warsaw.

ABANDONED SCHOOL MUST BE REOPENED

Langhorne Unable to Care for Primary Pupils From Manor

NOTICE IS GIVEN

LANGHORNE, July 2—Langhorne Manor, situated between the boroughs of South Langhorne and Langhorne, and surrounded by Middletown Township, has been served notice that it must open its old one-story school house on Hulmeville avenue, for the teaching of pupils from the first to fourth grades.

The school has been closed for some years, while pupils from the Manor attended the Langhorne-Middletown grade and high school in Langhorne, the borough paying $75 a year for each child attending.

This month Langhorne notified the Langhorne Manor School Board that it must find a place for children from the first to fourth grades as the high school needed more room for its students.

According to Burgess John M. Biedler, the school board is at the present time trying to find a place to send the pupils. Efforts are being made to reconsecrate a building in South Langhorne which that borough abandoned some years ago.

Bids are also being received for the placing of desks and other school equipment in the old Manor school, which is now being used by the Boy Scouts and as a polling place.

Parents in the Manor do not approve of the reopening of the old school. They claim that children do not get a proper education with one teacher to four grades.

EDGELY BRVES DROP THIRD GAME OF SEASON

Nosed Out by Ukrainians of Philadelphia by Score of 4 to 3

LAWLER ON THE MOUND

(By T. M. Juno)

Dropping their third contest of the season, the Edgely Braves were nosed out by the Philadelphia Ukrainians yesterday afternoon on the Edgely diamond. As in previous defeats, the score yesterday was again 4-3.

The Ukes made seven hits off Gene Lawler and four of those were extra base knocks which helped in the scoring. The Braves mustered six hits from the delivery of Ferguson, but they were kept well scattered.

The ultimate winners went to work in the first and tallied twice. Cobb opened with a single and Spewak reached first on an error. Muldoon fled out but Dubyk scored two on a double, and when Hyda also doubled, Dubyk scored.

The Braves evened matters in the third. Thompson walked and was sacrificed to second by J. Dick. Leinheiser singled, scoring Thompson. Lawler fled out. Mondo singled and Leinheiser counted. Ashby rolled out.

A triple by Joe Muldoon and a one-base knock by Hyda scored another Ukes' tally in the sixth, while the winning run was put across in the ninth when Hyda reached base on Thompson's error and scored on Jim Muldoon's single.

The Braves rallied in their last turn with the stick, but it was too late. With one out, Kimble doubled to left. Thompson scored Kimble with a clean hit to center. J. Dick fled out and Leinheiser rolled out.

PHILA. MAN DROWNS WHILE SWIMMING AT TORRESDALE MANOR

Michael Senskey, 39, Widower, Victim of Attack of Cramps

HAD BEEN SWIMMING

Bristol Fireman Recovers The Body After Grappling Five Minutes

Another Philadelphian out for a day of pleasure met death by drowning in the Delaware river, yesterday. The drowning occurred at Torresdale Manor and the victim was Michael Senskey, 39, 3063 Richmond street.

Torresdale Manor is located along the Delaware River, near the Philadelphia city line, and enjoys a nice beach upon which many bathers sport.

Yesterday Senskey visited the family of George Fox, Walnut avenue, and along with his sister, nephew and niece, went to the river to seek relief from the heat.

After dinner Senskey swam from the beach to Mud Island and then back again. He rested awhile on the beach and talked with his relatives. Then he started to swim to the ramp, a distance of about 500 feet. He was attacked with cramps and went down.

The victim's relatives were watching him and were witnesses to the drowning. His sister fainted.

Grappling hooks were called for and crews dragged the river for nearly 45 minutes. Word was sent to the Municipal Building here. Joseph Buck, Clifford Hagerman and William Dougherty, firemen, responded with pulmotor, grappling irons and other equipment.

The Bristol trio made a fast run in the fire chief's car and after grappling for about five minutes the body was recovered by Joseph Buck, Bristol. Buck was in the boat of Raymond Katzmer, Torresdale Manor.

The Bristol men, along with the Torresdale Sea Scouts and Bucks County Rescue Squad, worked strenuously in an effort to revive Senskey. The pulmotor was used but without avail. The body was brought to the Harriman Hospital, here. The Sea Scouts were directed by Skipper Riddle.

Senskey was a widower and his survivors are two sisters.

The Sea Scouts applied the Shafter method of resuscitation and spared no effort in their attempt to revive the victim.

SEARCH FOR DILLINGER

Chicago, Ill., July 2—From the underworld hide-outs of Chicago to the lake country of Northern Indiana, Federal, State and local authorities sought to pick up the trail of the man-killing John Dillinger and his bandit companions today.

Authorities expressed the belief that the desperadoes separated following the raid on the Merchants National Bank at South Bend, Ind., on Saturday, in which Policeman Howard Wayne was shot to death and Dillinger and his henchmen escaped with $30,000 loot. Two of the bandits identified as Homer VanMeter and George ("Baby Face") Nelson, assaulted Dr. Leslie Laird, 40, of North Webster, Ind., early Sunday morning, forced him to treat one of them for two bullet wounds in the arm. After administering medical attention, the physician was beaten over the head with a revolver, and left unconscious in his office. When he revived, some thirty minutes later, and attempted to telephone authorities he found the telephone wires had been cut. Dr. Laird identified VanMeter and the description he gave of the wounded man led authorities to believe he was Nelson.

COSTLY PROBS

It is a widely known fact that congressional committees seldom accomplish any results beneficial to the public. In another direction, though—that of costs—they always prove productive.

An illuminating example of this is to be seen in the house's investigation of Nazi activities in the United States. The revelation was made by Chairman Warren of the accounts committee, who a few days previously had disclosed large telegraph bills run up by congressmen in violation of the franking privilege.

The Nazi investigation committee had pledged itself to keep its expenses within an original appropriation of $10,000. A request for an additional $40,000 caused Mr. Warren to do a little investigating of his own. These are among the things he found:

Payment of a salary of $555.55 a month to a counsel, compared to $300 a month paid to Ferdinand Pecora as counsel for the senate banking committee; the hiring of 13 investigators at salaries ranging from $250 a month and expenses to $85 a month and expenses; two stenographers at $137.50 a month each; one messenger at $20 a week; one secretary, who formerly was "janitor" of the immigration committee, at $330 a month plus $90 a month as "clerk" of the immigration committee.

The house cut the requested $40,000 to $20,000.

It probably could have eliminated the entire item without damage to the public interest.

The providing of well-paid jobs to be distributed by the members seems to be the chief function of congressional committees. And this usually is about the measure of their accomplishments.

WHY MORE FARM LAND?

More than $65,000,000 will be spent by the federal government on new irrigation projects should recommendations of the interdepartmental committee to the president be carried out.

How to reconcile this proposal with the government's crop-reduction program is a puzzling proposition. Why should additional farming land be opened up at a huge cost when that at present under cultivation is returning a far greater yield of crops than can be disposed of profitably by the growers?

The mere fact that the recommendation has been made doesn't mean, of course, that it will be accepted by the president.

It will be hard, to convince the public of the wisdom of such an undertaking. Several irrigation projects are under way, and these would be carried forward along with the inauguration of others.

Unless a much greater consumption demand than exists develops or unless new markets are found for farm products, there appears to be little prospect of an early solution of the surplus problem. This would mean that farm relief, already constituting a heavy public expense, would have to be continued on an increasing scale.

A philanthropist is one who generously gives away the money that death will soon take from him, anyway.

If you get a poor lawyer, you lose the case. If you hire the best one, the jury knows you are guilty.

Echoes of The Past

By Louise White Watson

"A Nation's Life"

You recall in that poem, "Liberty and Independence," where, in that mad, throbbing crowd, tense with excitement as to the outcome of the next few minutes, one cries out, as the crowd jostles and pushes, "I am stifling!" and another calls out to him, "Stifle, then! When a Nation's life is at hazard, We've no time to think of men!" And on down in the poem it says, after describing how the bonfires and the torches lighted up the night's repose, "And when we forget the smiling sunlight On the Fourth of each July, We will ne'er forget the bellman, Who betwixt the earth and sky, Rang out loudly 'Independence!' Which, please, God, shall never die."

One stands reverently before Independence Hall, Philadelphia, and listens, heart a-throb, as Echo says, as she ever has been saying all throughout the many years since that day, "Behold! You are in sacred grounds. This ancient building, wherein was enacted that which history loves to record as those men, carrying the load of the Nation, did what heart and courage dictated and formed this, the Cradle of the Constitution. Dignity enfolds; reverence of the whole world, covers it tenderly. Men stand before it as though hesitant to tread any nearer to where those men of old, gathered to proclaim liberty to one and all. And then, the portals beckon saying, 'Enter. We belong to you. They gave us to you and to all future generations, to protect as only men of valor can protect.' One enters. No noisy jubilation now, only the quick, throbbing stir of the heart as one voices a prayer of thanksgiving for the country that is ours to honor and protect. There, on the wall, may be seen the picture showing the signing of the Constitution, from a study sketch in oil by David Rossiter. What emotions stir one as Memory leads one unerringly back to those tumultuous days. No one speaks. Then, as though stirred by the call of other events taking place in that part of Philadelphia, made sacred by the past, one moves to other scenes.

Its Birthday

It was on the 17th day of September, 1787, thirty-nine American patriots affixed their signatures to that document, framed with wonderful foresight for the preservation of the nation, that has ever since made it one respected by every nation on the globe. Too often this date, so solemnly important, is forgotten or if not entirely so, is only brought to attention with a sort of dazed memory, groping for the significance of September's Day. It is said by some historians, there is not a more important day in American history, claiming that Constitution Day is equally as important as the Fourth of July. July 4th, 1776, the nation was declared free and independent of Old World domination. September 17, 1787, another freedom was declared, that from chaotic drift toward anarchy and national ruin.

Had the Constitution not been adopted, all the achievements of the Revolutionary War, would have been in vain. Independence Hall listened anxiously, excitedly, as the pros and cons were discussed as to the best method of proceeding. General George Washington was the president of the convention. Seventy-three delegates, selected by the various States, were present. Contentions arose among themselves, some of them hurrying home in high dudgeon, loudly declaring that the convention was exceeding its power. Some who had helped frame the Constitution, not being present on the last day, lost the opportunity of affixing their signatures.

Thus one sees but the thirty-nine names on that historical record. Any one with a grain of patriotism, must picture those different men as after signing, he hands the pen to another who steps to the desk, tracing out the name that stood then and ever since, as one with the love of country, Washington's name heads the list. Lower down one reads, "B. Franklin." And as Philadelphia claimed his nearness, one finds the "Robert Morris," where "George Clymer" also dwelt. Close following, geographically, comes "Alexander Hamilton," New York. Of the thirty-nine names, Pennsylvania had eight. Eighteen delegates refused to act in any way.

Celebrations

The country smiles and throws her mantle, velvet-green, over the land once laid waste, when man fought for this liberty now yours and mine. A holiday proclaimed for the Nation, a day when families may forget the farm, the office, the cares of the home and go off to enjoy a day of relaxation, made possible those many, many years ago by determined men. The parks, shady places along the beautiful Neshaminy with its rhythmically musical name, up in the mountains, along the beach, with its solo of grandeur, swelled to a glorious chorus, all hailing the Nation that knows no equal. Lunch baskets, thermos bottles, all add their wealth to the day of rest. The Nation's holiday. The Nation's life is a story. Rockets reaching skyward, the little fire-cracker bursting with pride as it sends forth its tribute to Old Glory and that for which it stands. The pin-wheels, mad with excitement, whirl and whiz themselves into complete exhaustion. And standing by, happily excited, is childhood, rushing toward the revolving mass of powder, paper, then, when a splutter of sparks comes a little nearer, darting back with a quiver of excitement, expressed by the wide-awake muscles clamping to be in at the show.

The Music

Did you ever see a band parading horns tooting, music tossing itself rapturously all along the way, but what some young Americans, self-appointed, march proudly by its side? Have you seen them casting glances every now and then, toward the bystanders, hoping they are being envied as they step along in triumph? Oh, young America, yours it is to step along in triumph. All this grand country asks of you is to stand by loyally, help hoist the flag; keep it from trailing in the dust; keep step with your manhood; hats off as the flag goes by; cheer lustily and salute when your heart thrills and your step quickens as, Old Glory waving, the band strikes up the National anthem and the voices leap into glad action, singing, "And the Star-Spangled Banner in triumph shall wave o'er the land of the free And the home of the brave!"

In the stampede to get family pictures back on the screen, Fox leads off with an idea that ought to ring the gong at the box office.

Though it's all supposed to be very secret, they are planning to team Will Rogers and the new child sensation, Shirley Temple. Courtney Riley Cooper, well-known writer of circus and action stories, has been engaged to write a scenario in which Rogers is to play a round-house foreman living in a division point in the Rockies. Plot is to have strictly family appeal, with Will shown as the arbiter of the romances, squabbles and political affairs of the little railroad town.

The picture will be the first time Rogers has ever been teamed with anyone. A triumph, any way you look at it, for the 5½-year-old Shirley who has become a star in the amazing time of six months.

When the news came that the New York censor board had barred "It Ain't No Sin", Paramount officials dreaded, among other things, how Mae West would take the blow. Emanuel Cohen personally made a trip to her apartment to break the news.

The blonde star replied simply: "Well, boys, let's get to work." And that is why Mae disappointed her fans by not showing up at the benefit for the Marion Davies foundation. She had spent two hours that morning at the beauty parlor, had her dress laid out and the car ordered to go when she got the news. With thousands of dollars at stake and with the picture scheduled for immediate release, the star was compelled to give up her plans for the

by JOAN CLAYTON AND MALCOLM LOGAN

SYNOPSIS

In August, Seifert Vail was murdered at exclusive Sherwood Forest Sanatorium. Up to that time, Mark Hillyer, the playwright, crippled from arthritis, had been bored. The crime gave him new interest in life. It was he who finally solved the mystery. He saw the significance of the phonograph record singing in Vail's own voice in the room where its creator lay dead. All the patients flocked to Mark's room and gossiped. He learned all about their affairs. Among them were Willis Clendening, Milton Cross and the wealthy James Ruxton, all of whom lived in a cottage with Vail. Loren Ruxton, James Ruxton's favorite nephew and heir, also came. Even reticent Dr. John Calvert enjoyed a chat with Mark now and then. Sue Faraday, Mark's attractive nurse, acted as hostess. Vail, a former operatic star, visited Mark only once, and then to ridicule Mark's play. Vail told how his wife Francine loved him in the role of Tristan; then he broke off crying, and left abruptly. He made his last public appearance at a dance given for the patients by James Ruxton. Dr. Calvert accompanies Sue to the dance to Loren's disappointment. Bob Fowler, Mark's secretary, sees Loren and Vail in the shadows of the scrubbery. A shining object passes from one to the other. Loren cuts in on Calvert and Sue. The physician surrenders her ungraciously. Suddenly Vail takes the floor and tries to sing "Waiting For You" in memory of his late wife. His voice fails and he pounds the piano in anger. Dr. Calvert leads him away, saying: "It would have been better for everyone if she had lived and you had died."

CHAPTER V

I did not return to the dance. Feeling disgusted and oppressed, I went upstairs to my room. I never again saw Seifert Vail alive.

Many times I was to recall that final glimpse of him as he staggered off into the shadows with Dr. Calvert at his side. If I had accompanied him to the cottage, would he perhaps have confided in me and so have saved his own life and two others?

I have convinced myself at last that I could have done nothing. All of Vail's knowledge would have been useless without one essential fact which he did not know. He died ignorant of the motive of his murderer, and that night, while the sanatorium danced, sentence of death had already been passed upon him.

I did not see Mark until the next afternoon. I awoke with a headache and remained in bed all morning. Every hour the heat increased. The sun glared down from a brassy sky, and no wind stirred. The jagged mountains west of the hospital were obscured by a sultry haze, thickened in one place by the smoke of a forest fire. Whenever an automobile drove along the road connecting the sanatorium buildings, a cloud of dust would rise behind it and settle slowly upon the parched grass and shrubbery.

The hour and a half between 2 and 3:30 is a rest period at Sherwood Forest. All patients are expected to spend it in bed, and visitors are asked not to walk through the grounds or to make any noise. At the end of that period of quiet, I went to the hospital. Mark was in bed on his porch. He had not slept that afternoon and he was restless and irritable. I attempted to divert him with an account of the dance.

"I've heard all I want to hear about Vail's dramatic breakdown," he interrupted grimly.

"I might have known Sue would tell you about it," I said.

"It wasn't Sue. Some day that girl is going to choke on her professional ethics."

"Who told you then, Mark?"

"Four other busybodies," he replied sourly. "They gave me four versions of this scene that disagreed in every detail."

To change the subject, I asked where Sue was.

"She went out at exactly five minutes of three," Mark said, "I was just falling asleep when she came tiptoeing out for a last look at me and woke me up. She'll be back in a few minutes to entertain you."

I said nothing. Suddenly Mark exclaimed, "Lord, Bob, I'm bored!"

He glared accusingly at me, as though I were responsible. He threw off the sheet that covered him, raised himself on his elbows and stared moodily at the grounds below his porch. Mark's blues are avoided by the wise, so I was about to leave when he spoke.

"I've spent my nights and days waiting for you . . ."

The record went on to its sentimental conclusion and then started again.

I sighed and Mark glanced at his bedside clock.

"That record has been playing for ten minutes," he murmured. "I wonder why our friend doesn't change it?"

"He's probably getting revenge for his failure last night," I said.

"I wonder," Mark repeated.

There was a quiet knock at the door and Dr. Calvert came in, looking hot and fatigued. He smiled wanly at us and said, "How are you bearing up under the heat?"

"I'm not even trying to," said Mark. "I'm going to sue Sherwood Forest for misrepresentation. I was told it was cool in the mountains."

"We get a few days like this every summer," John Calvert said. He sighed and sat down in a chair, stretching out his long legs. His stethoscope, in his side pocket, seemed to interfere with his comfort, and he pulled it out and put it on Mark's table. There was no conversation for several minutes.

Then Mark looked at the doctor and said, "You're gloomy as death this afternoon. What's wrong?"

"The heat, principally. In weather like this most of the patients spend their time thinking up grievances to unload on me."

"Oh," said Mark. "I thought you were brooding over last night."

"What do you mean?" Calvert said sharply.

Mark answered, "I've heard tales. Is it true that Seifert Vail collapsed at the piano and that you threw him out a window while the other guests applauded?"

"Look there!" he said angrily. I turned, wondering what interested him in the bucolic scene below. There was only one cottage visible from the porch, and only two persons in sight—two gardeners who strolled slowly back and forth, sprinkling beds of drooping flowers.

"I've been watching those hill billies for two hours," said Mark. "For two solid hours I've been envying that pair of sound-limbed peasants. Why should they be able to walk while I have to lie in bed?"

"What use is a brain to a cripple?" There was nothing to say, Mark turned his head away. He lay quietly, staring at his long, thin, useless legs. In the silence I heard a phonograph playing in the distance.

"Well, I've finished my act," Mark said presently. "Got a cigarette?"

I handed him my case. He grinned like a wise, precocious gamin at my downcast face. His temperament is so much more mercurial than mine that it is his habit to fling me into the depths and then wonder why I am there. He smoked in silence. He seemed to be listening to the phonograph. His eyes narrowed thoughtfully.

"Recognize that tune?" he asked abruptly.

I started. "Why, yes, it's Vail's song, the one he tried to sing last night. He must be playing it on his phonograph."

Mark nodded and said, "He's proving that he had a voice once. As I listened to the distant sound of Vail's voice, I was overcome by a sense of deadening familiarity. This day was like yesterday, and yesterday was like the day before."

UNDER THE WIDE AND SPREADING SKY

SUMMER is the season when the possibilities for enjoyment are multiplied about you. Under the wide and spreading sky there is room for much happiness.

You don't need great wealth, and you don't need to fasten all your hopes for happiness on a short vacation. Whether you live in the city, with all its modern means of tempering the climate to your needs, or in the country where the good earth responds so beautifully to your touch—there is much to do, pleasantly and happily.

But there is art in enjoyment. You should dress properly for each occasion. You should have within easy reach the things that make hospitality inviting and gracious. You should have the means of refreshing and beautifying your person and improving your sense of well-being. You should be comfortable.

It is not so hard to do all this. It is not accomplished in one frenzied and expensive effort. Comforts should grow about your home, as flowers and fruits blossom and ripen.

Read the advertisements, and acquire the things you need from what you learn there. Fresh light summer wear. Foods and beverages that keep crisp and cool in modern refrigerators. Gas and electricity that cook and brighten without heating your rooms. Electric fans, perhaps. Soaps, cosmetics, and heaps of fresh towels for frequent showers.

And read in the advertisements where to go and what to do in order to make Summer the golden season of your life.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By ANN PAGE

THE vacation season for housewives begins when they decide to make things as easy as possible for themselves by taking advantage of what the market affords in fruits, salad greens, vegetables, ready-to-eat meats, and packaged foods. Fruits and simple puddings can replace pies, cakes and elaborate desserts most of the time. Cold meats and salads follow well after a hot canned soup, and canned beans or spaghetti help out the luncheon or supper menu. When it is necessary to cook, choose a relatively cold day and cook foods which can be served cold a second or third day. Cheese with a fruit or vegetable salad and bread or rolls makes a simple and well-balanced meal with little trouble.

The Quaker Maid suggests the following menus:

Councilmen Arthur Forst and Elwood Kohl said the amounts asked of the townships were conservative. It was explained by Mr. Kohl that at one time the fire tax proposition was put up to the people of Falls Township and voted down "yet the people of Morrisville pay such a fire tax and the townships are getting the protection." Mr. Kohl said, "and in justice to the people of Morrisville, council took the action of asking for the donations."

Penna. National Guard To Train Soon at Mt. Gretna

By Foster Tea Frye
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

MT. GRETNA, July 2—(INS)—This peace-loving Summer resort is soon to be transformed into a scene of militaristic activity, with the rumble of trucks and kitchens, the clatter of horses hooves, the creeping of tractor-tanks and the roar of bombing planes overhead as more than 12,000 officers and enlisted men of the Pennsylvania National Guard invade the community for their annual Summer training.

This spectacular encampment from July 14 to 28 this year will bring together the entire Twenty-Eighth Division in the largest peace-time mobilization of Pennsylvania's troops since the divisional review for the distinguished French World War hero, Gen. Henri Gouraud.

The encampment this year promises to be more realistic in military activity than any other such period, since the mobilization of men for the Spanish-American War. The densely wooded sections of Mt. Gretna, Indiantown, Manada, and Swatara Gaps, Colebrook and Middletown air depot, will be converted into a typical Argonne forest.

All troops will be encamped here simultaneously during these two weeks for the first time since the World War.

Preparations for the arrival of troops have been underway for some time under the direction of Col. William Hicks, superintendent of the state military reservation, and his corps of men.

The most pretentious warfare problem ever attempted by the Pennsylvania Guard, involving a full strength maneuver will feature the mimic warfare at Indiantown Gap this year.

Improvements costing $75,000, including the erection of 37 permanent buildings, completion of a separate water and sewage systems there, and many other minor features, will greet the citizen soldiers upon their arrival at Indiantown.

Major General Edward Shannon, commander of the Pennsylvania National Guard, together with his aides and state and national staff officers, will continue to occupy Divisional Hill at Mt. Gretna, from which point they will direct and supervise the training in all surrounding camp sites.

Six thousand men will be stationed at Indiantown, the other troops will be placed at Colebrook where the cavalry training area is located; Mt. Gretna, the site for infantry, engineer, military police, chemical warfare, tractor-tanks, intelligence troops, communications units, and medical and hospitalization squads, and Middletown, where the Twenty-Eighth Division aviation squadron is located at the U. S. Army air depot.

With the light and heavy artillery located at Indiantown, all outlying groups will be so equally situated from the central "war" zone at Mt. Gretna that a general mobilization of all men could be accomplished readily, it was explained.

During this intricate problem of warfare, the theoretical advance of the "enemy," commonly known as the Red forces, will take place between the Blue and North Mountains of the Indiantown area.

The maneuvers will involve movements into the sector of Swatara and Manada Gaps, flanking the Indiantown Gap section. In an effort to gain tactical advantage, or surprise and destroy the enemy.

However, every precaution has been taken against a too drastic adherence to the latter, by the issuance of "blank" ammunition.

"Viva Villa!" Gives Beery A Most Unforgettable Role

"Viva Villa!" which shows tonight and Tuesday at the Grand Theatre with Wallace Beery starred, takes its place among the truly great pictures of all time.

A fictional version of the life and loves of Pancho Villa, the great Mexican war lord who was the world's outstanding figure in the decade preceding the World War, it combines spectacle and human elements in a manner reminiscent of that great classic of all time, "The Birth of a Nation."

It presents Pancho Villa in love, his feminine foils being Fay Wray and Katherine De Mille. Highlights of this romantic aspect of the picture include Beery's attempt to win the love of Miss Wray by force—a scene in which she shoots him and in which he beats her with a cattle whip.

Beery's fiery conquest of Katherine De Mille is another romantic highlight of the photoplay, as is their mock marriage at midnight in a lonely hut, and the scenes which follow.

Spectacular highlights of the story include the conquests of Chihuahua, Santa Rosalia, Torreon and other important cities of Mexico, these battles being among the most spectacular ever shown on the screen.

One hundred thousand Mexican natives were used in the picture, as many as 6,000 appearing on the screen at one time in the battle sequences.

KILLED BY CAVE-IN

GUNNISON, Colo.—A "pirates' cave" on the banks of the Tomichi river near Sargents, Colo., proved a death trap for Melvin James Hicks, nine-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hicks. The boy was exploring the outlaw rendezvous with a group of playmates when the roof fell in, partially covering his body and suffocating him.

HORSE THIEF JAILED

SHERIDAN, Wyo.—(INS)—Revival of the long-neglected industry of the old West led to the sentencing of O. P. McKinley, southern Montana rancher, to from three-and-a-half to 15 years in the Wyoming penitentiary. McKinley and L. A. Jordan, his employee, were convicted of stealing 15 head of horses. Jordan was paroled.

BOSTON—(INS)—Hailed with enthusiasm by delivery truckmen and motorists, an unemployment project of painting house numbers on curbstones throughout the city has been inaugurated here by the Public Works Department.

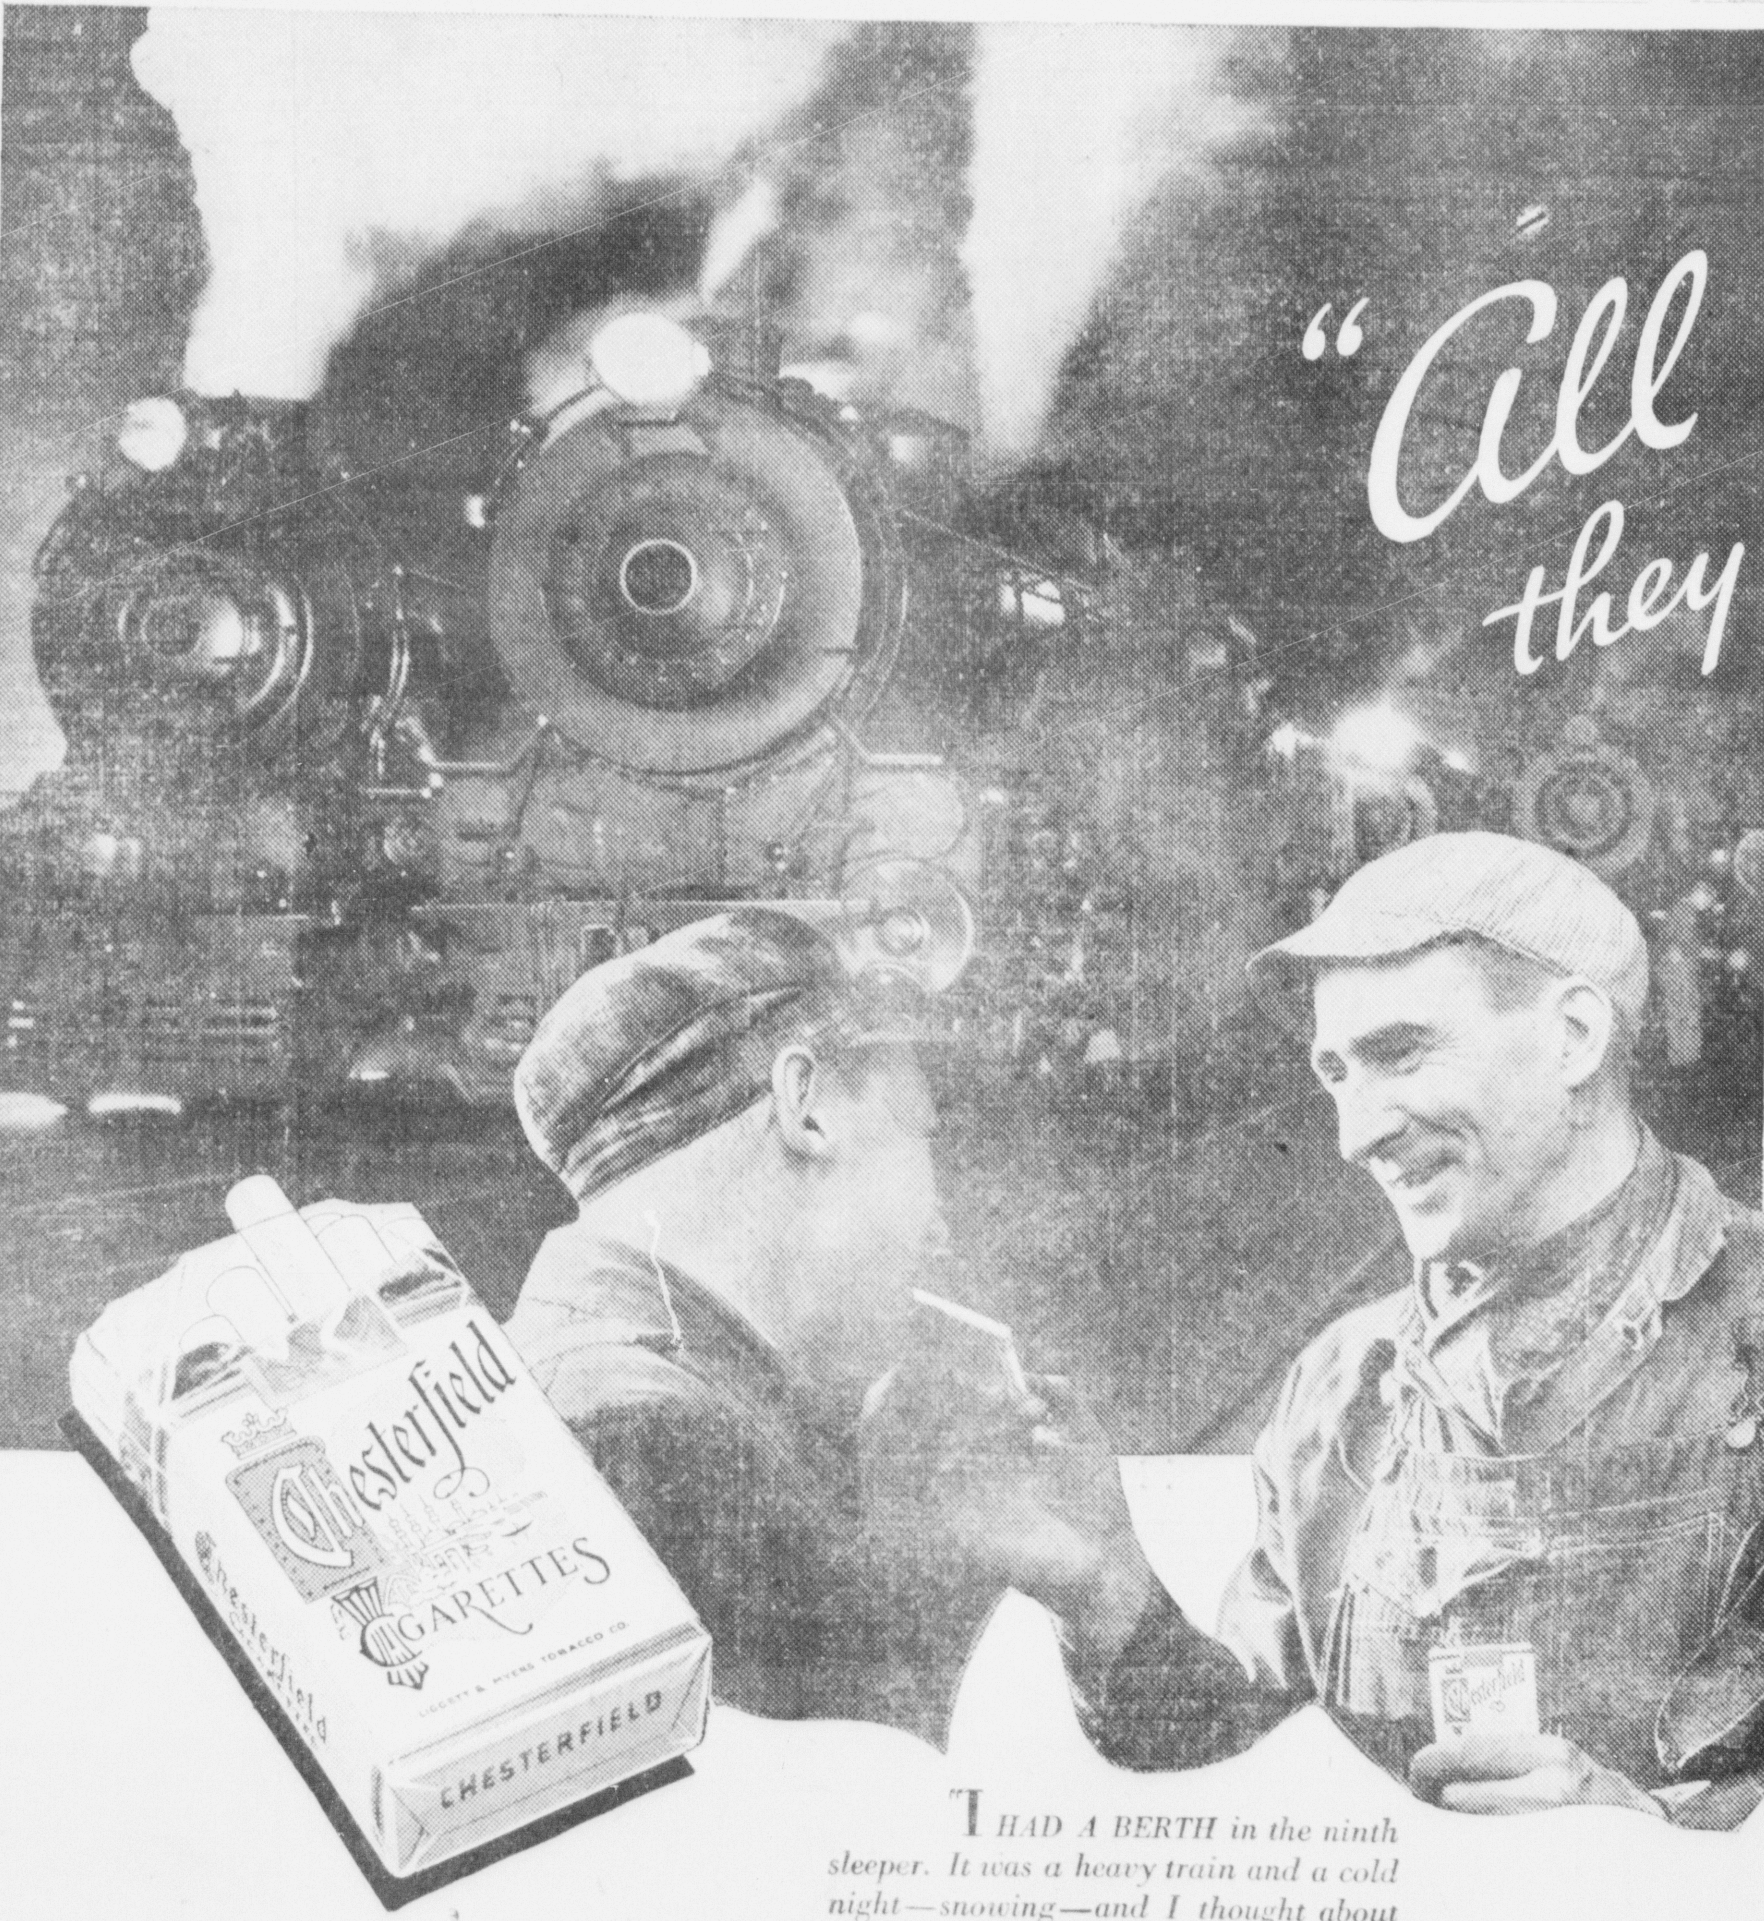

Intimate Glimpses of the Life of Movieland's Marie Dressler

Norma Shearer presenting acting trophy to Marie Dressler.

Born in Cobourg, Ontario, on Nov. 9, 1873, Marie Dressler took part in amateur theatricals at the age of five, and went on the stage at 14, there to remain until motion pictures beckoned her to fame and fortune. Making her start during the days of the silent pictures, she gained moviedom heights in 1927, and in 1931 won the coveted trophy of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the best acting of the year. A series of intimate glimpses of the star, from her first photograph as a stage actress, to her most recent picture as a film luminary, are shown in the film-fashioned strip above.

"All they clear Satisfy"

"To me a cigarette is the best smoke. It's a short smoke...and then again it's milder.

"I notice that you smoke Chesterfields also. I like them very much."

"I HAD A BERTH in the ninth sleeper. It was a heavy train and a cold night—snowing—and I thought about the man with his hand on the throttle. I admire and respect those men."

STRANGE SIGHTS—

Lee Tracy walking around the Paramount lot with Isabel Jewell, wearing a long nose made of mortician's putty... Gertrude Michaels, the blonde, in a black wig; Helen Mack at the next commissary table in a blonde wig... A blacksmith shoeing a pony on Wilshire Boulevard for a covered wagon team advertising the Hollywood Stables, a new place.

Here's Hollywood's latest nautical insult. Glenn Tryon, who is now waiting for R-K-O, owns a 14-foot boat, the "Lackadaisical," of which he is always bragging. Bill Seiter invited him down to Wilmington for a trip on his 53-foot motor-sailer, "Clelito." When Tryon went aboard he found they had slung his 14-foot cruiser on the dory davits of the Seiter yacht. "Thought it would make a good lifeboat," said Bill, innocently.

On his way ahead of the "baby stars" who will make their public bow, June 20, at the Minneapolis Shrine convention, Wampus Secretary Wilson Heller gives the publicity organization a batting average of 77 per cent, in picking star material.

Over ten years, Wampus has picked 130 starlets. Four of them have become stars, 66 featured players. The stardom prediction for the 1934 crop includes Hazel Hayes, Jacqueline Wells, Lucille Lund, Helene Cohan.

One of the colorful events for the Hollywood Bowl season is a new symphony, "Harlem Heab'n," written by David Broekman, studio musical director, with the odes by Clarence Muse. The new work will be performed August 11.
